

Brand Website & Content Strategy

1. EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The work already looks like the work of a serious architect. What's inconsistent is the presentation around it. This document is about closing that gap — not by adding more content or more animation, but by making everything that already exists read as one deliberate voice instead of several different ones.

Two things drive this: a tightened visual identity, and a content system that turns each finished project into weeks of consistent material — rather than one-off posts made under deadline pressure.

2. BRAND AUDIT

What's already working

- The built projects — Madhavam and others — show real material and proportion sense, not just render quality
- A neutral, warm material palette (stone, wood, marble) already exists across the actual project photography
- Site execution and finished-project photos are present, not just concept renders — this is a real, working practice

What's inconsistent — with evidence

Two different logo treatments are currently in active use on the same feed:

Version A — gold serif script wordmark

Version B — bold white sans-serif on black

Both are on the same profile. Neither is wrong on its own — the issue is that a visitor sees two different studios depending which post they land on.

The caption voice shifts the same way — some posts read like considered captions, others like social-media marketing copy (“ASK WHAT’S IN YOUR PLAYLIST”, “BEST MATERIALS FOR ELEVATION FACADE” in large bold overlay text). That style works for reach; it works against the idea of a ₹1–5Cr-project studio being the calm, confident authority in the room.

3. BRAND POSITIONING — A REAL DECISION, NOT A DEFAULT

One genuine strategic fork worth putting in front of Harshit directly, rather than deciding on his behalf:

Option	What it means	Trade-off
Keep ‘Studio HA Architects’ as the primary brand	Current direction. Reads as an established firm/practice rather than one person.	Slightly harder to build personal authority (press, speaking, awards attach to a name more easily than a studio name)
Lead with ‘Harshit Agarwal’, studio as the company behind him	His Instagram bio already credits him by name — this would make that the headline, not a credit line.	For high-end residential work, clients often hire a person, not a firm — this can compound faster over a few years, but is a bigger identity shift to commit to

Recommendation: worth a direct conversation with him before locking the logo/site — this is his call to make, not one to make for him.

4. VOICE — WHISPER, NOT SELL

The concrete shift is in how work gets captioned and introduced. Same photo, different voice:

Current style	Suggested direction
“BEST MATERIALS FOR ELEVATION FACADE”	“Facade Study — Sandstone, Morning Light”
“10 THINGS YOU NEED TO DO BEFORE DESIGNING YOUR HOME” (listicle overlay)	A short, unhurried caption under the image itself — let the photo lead, text follows quietly

This doesn’t mean removing personality or humour from the account entirely — it means the project photography (the actual sales tool) gets treated with more restraint than the reels.

5. VISUAL IDENTITY SYSTEM

Colour

Sampled from his own project photography, not invented — carried over from the earlier direction document:

Typography

A refined serif for headings that echoes the existing wordmark, paired with a clean neutral sans for body copy. Confirm a licensing-safe web font pairing at design stage.

Photography & Videography Direction

- Consistent colour grading across all projects — currently varies shoot-to-shoot
- Golden-hour or blue-hour exterior shots prioritised over harsh daylight (Madhavam's twilight shot is the benchmark)
- Material close-ups treated as their own shots, not just details within a wider photo — stone, wood grain, jaali shadow patterns
- A short (30–45s) cinematic walkthrough per flagship project — slow, minimal cuts, no trending audio

6. DIGITAL EXPERIENCE PRINCIPLES

Calibrated specifically to the brief he gave you — few features, high polish — not a generic ‘luxury site’ checklist. Restraint is the point, so this list is intentionally short:

- Slow, minimal transitions (page fades, subtle image scale on hover) — already specified in the PRD's entry animation and motion sections
- No autoplay audio
- No counters, testimonial sliders, popups, or gradient/shadow-heavy UI — these read as template defaults, not craft

Cursor effects, parallax, and heavier animation libraries were considered and deliberately left out — they add build time and page weight without serving a 4-page, few-features brief. Worth revisiting only if scope expands to a larger site.

7. CONTENT PRODUCTION ENGINE

The highest-leverage recommendation in here: treat every finished project as a content system, not a single post.

- Hero image set (20–30 photographs) — exterior, interior, material detail
- One long-form case study for the website's Project Detail page
- A journal entry — a short, specific piece (“Choosing Stone for a North-Facing Facade”), not a generic blog post
- 4–6 Instagram posts drawn from the same shoot, spaced over weeks rather than posted all at once

One well-documented project can realistically carry the account and site content for a month or more — this reduces pressure to manufacture content between projects.

8. SEO & GROWTH STRATEGY

A separate workstream from the build itself, as flagged earlier — the technical foundation (schema, meta, alt text) is already specified in the PRD. The keyword direction:

- Location-first terms: ‘luxury architect Bareilly’, ‘villa architect Uttar Pradesh’, ‘residential architect Bareilly’
- Once local rankings are established, broaden to regional/national terms: ‘contemporary residential architecture India’, ‘luxury villa architect India’
- Google Business Profile, consistent name/address/phone across directories
- Journal content (above) is what actually feeds this over time — search engines need text to index, and this gives them well-targeted text instead of generic filler

9. PHASED ROADMAP

Phase	Covers	Depends on
1 — Brand Strategy	Positioning decision, logo consolidation, voice/caption system	Harshit's input on the positioning fork above
2 — Website Design & Build	Per the PRD — 4 pages, entry animation, Framer build	Phase 1 sign-off; content checklist from PRD
3 — Content Production	Re-shoot/grade existing projects if needed; new project documentation system going forward	Access to 3–5 fully shot projects
4 — Growth	SEO setup, Google Business Profile, journal cadence	Live site from Phase 2

10. REFERENCE STUDIES

Verified, currently live, and worth studying for tone

- Vincent Van Duysen — vincentvanduysen.com — the clearest benchmark for restraint and material honesty in residential work
- John Pawson — johnpawson.com — minimal to the point of austerity; useful upper bound for how little a luxury site can say
- Studio MK27 — studiomk27.com.br — large-scale photography carrying almost the entire page
- Foster + Partners — fosterandpartners.com — useful for how a practice presents scale and range without losing restraint (not a material match, but a structure reference)
- Rooshad Shroff — rooshadshroff.com — closest match to the arch /jaali material language
- Sanjay Puri Architects — <https://sanjaypuriarchitects.com> — sculptural stone forms, similar warm palette

11. CONSOLIDATED CLIENT ASK LIST

Brand

- Positioning decision: studio-forward or personal-name-forward (see fork above)
- Brand story, vision, and the kind of client/project he wants more of
- Architects or studios he personally admires, beyond what's already been discussed

Projects

- 3–5 fully documented projects: professional photos, material close-ups, any drone/video footage, plans/sketches if he wants them shown

Logo & Brand Assets

- Vector logo files (AI/SVG/EPS), light and dark versions
- Any existing brand guideline, font, or colour reference beyond Instagram

Content

- About / philosophy paragraph in his own words
- Press, awards, or publications, if any

Technical

- Domain ownership status and preference
- Preferred contact method: direct only, or a form
- Google Business Profile status — claimed or not
